Why saving enough for retirement is difficult

NO FREE LUNCH
AVINASH LUTHRIA

If you don't find the amount that you should ideally save each month for retirement shockingly high, then you have most likely made a mistake in calculating the amount that you will need (as I have written previously in this newspaper). Here are six reasons why it is so difficult to build an adequate retirement corpus.

Longevity risk
A 60-year-old upper-middle-class Indian woman is, on average, likely to live till the age of 83. So, if she plans for expenses till the age of 83, then there is a 50 per cent probability that she will live longer than that, and run out of money. There is no tax-efficient way to mitigate this risk in India.

Burden of tax and inflation
If inflation is 6 per cent and the return on the Nifty 50 index fund is 10 per cent, then capital gains tax at 10 per cent reduces the real (or net of inflation) return from 4 per cent to 3 per cent, an effective tax on real return of 25 per cent. If the return on a fixed deposit is 6.1 per cent, then income tax at 30 per cent reduces the real return from 0.1 per cent to minus 1.7 per cent i.e. the effective tax on real return is 1,800 per cent.

Financial repression
Real returns on zero-risk debt mutual funds (overnight funds) have been consistently negative. The only way for the government's debt to remain sustainable is for most individuals to bear this pain and subsidise the government.

Unexpected high inflation
Inflation is a hidden tax that is imposed by the government. It is also a tax that is extremely erratic. Even if the government would like to keep inflation at 6 per cent, it could shoot up to more than 8 per cent and stay at that level. So, the expected inflation might be 6 per cent and you might have put your money into a 10-year cumulative fixed deposit at a pre-tax interest rate of 6 per cent. However, if inflation shoots up to 8 per cent and stays at that level, the money you get back after 10 years would have lost 17 per cent of its purchasing power, even before you pay income tax on the interest.

Career risk
A 30-year-old software programmer may have assumed he will work till the age of 60. But it is possible there is no demand for his skill set by the time he is 50.

Psychological reasons
First, persistently high inflation in developing countries tricks the mind. Due to high inflation, for almost all of us, our net worth during retirement will increase initially, then it will gradually drop, and finally it will collapse rapidly towards zero.

Second, it is very likely that your peers have not done a detailed and accurate retirement calculation and are overspending. If your calculations are accurate, your current lifestyle is likely to be much lower than that of your peers who earn a similar salary.

Third, many of our parents may have been entitled to a government pension or were dependent on their children during retirement. So, we are the first generation that has to learn to save half or more of our post-tax monthly salary. Finally, we have to get buy-in from our family that it is better to look back and regret going on very few vacations, rather than regretting that we ran out of money during retirement.

P2P platforms can offer up to 20% return, but carry high risk

Limit your allocation to 5-10% of your fixed-income portfolio and stick to highly-rated borrowers

BINDISHA SARANG
A round ₹3,000 crore was lent by peer-to-peer (P2P) lending platforms in 2021-22. According to IndustryARC, a research and consultancy firm, the Indian P2P lending market is expected to grow at a compounded annual rate of 21.6 per cent between 2021 and 2026.

Millennials, in particular, are increasingly adopting these digital lending and borrowing platforms. According to the The Financially Independent Millennial report 2022 by CASHe, an artificial intelligence-driven financial wellness platform, about 12 per cent of millennials (the survey covered 20,000 people) had participated in peer-to-peer (P2P) lending.

Eliminating the intermediaries
P2P platforms remove traditional intermediaries such as banks and non-banking financial companies (NBFCs) from the lending and borrowing process.

Neha Juneja, chief executive officer (CEO) & co-founder, IndiaP2P.com says, "Instead of parking their money with a bank that lends it further to make a return, a retail investor can now lend directly."

A P2P lending platform offers investors higher returns than traditional fixed deposits (FDs) or debt mutual funds. "Investors will take higher risk by lending directly but also earn a lot more on these platforms," says Juneja.

These are regulated platforms. Bhavin Patel, co-founder & CEO, LenDenClub, says, "The P2P lending and borrowing mechanism is regulated by the Reserve Bank of India (RBI)."

How they work
While some P2P platforms lend to salaried individuals, others target Micro, Small, and Medium Enterprises (MSMEs). All loans are collateral-free. The procedure for lending on a P2P platform is simple and entirely digital. The customer first has to complete a standard KYC. Next, he has to choose from the borrowers or loans available on the platform.

"Borrowers are typically charged an interest rate of 18-20 per cent. Deserving customers with high credit ratings can get as low a rate as 11-12 per cent," says Juneja.

Some platforms allow lenders to choose the borrower and negotiate the interest rate. Yet others don't permit interest rate related negotiations but allow them to select the borrower. Others have algorithms that manage the lender's money.

They charge a fee (which varies across platforms) from both lenders and borrowers.

Varied models
P2 platforms have a variety of offerings. IndiaP2P.com, for instance, focuses on women business owners with good records of loan repayment. Juneja says, "We only have borrowers who have existing, good credit bureau scores. We also physically meet and verify each borrower."

LenDenClub and a few others offer Fixed-Maturity Peer-to-Peer Plans (FMPP) that offer 10 to 12 per cent return with 99 per cent certainty. Patel says, "FMPP works on the principle of hyper-diversification. The invested amount is allocated across numerous borrowers, thereby reducing risk."

Some platforms operate in the cryptocurrency P2P space. Tether (USDT) is an Ethereum

P2P PLATFORMS: WEIGHING UP

- | Pros | Cons |
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Lenders can potentially earn higher returns on their investments ■ Can generate passive income with a smaller amount of capital, compared to a traditional alternative like real estate ■ Can diversify portfolio beyond traditional avenues | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ The possibility of default by a borrower, resulting in loss of principal, is always present ■ Many of the borrowers borrowing from P2P platforms do so because they have low credit scores, are unable to get loans from traditional sources, and hence carry higher risk ■ If the platform allocates money across borrowers, as some do, the lender can't do his own due diligence on the quality of the borrower | token pegged to the value of the US dollar. WazirX, a cryptocurrency platform, can transfer the Indian rupee (INR) to a peer who wants to convert his USDT to INR.

"WazirX currently offers only USDT/INR pairs for P2P trades to keep things simple and ensure high liquidity. USDT is a stablecoin and its price fluctuation is extremely narrow. So, it is very similar to trading in a fiat currency," says Rajagopal Menon, vice president, WazirX.

Regulated sector
The RBI has regulated P2P lending platforms since 2017. Only licensed platforms can operate. Juneja says, "An invest-tor can invest a maximum of ₹50 lakh in P2P lending while a borrower can borrow a maximum of ₹10 lakh."

How to enhance safety
P2P platforms don't assure either return of principal or payment of interest. Juneja says, "The risk of a borrower defaulting is always present. To minimise this risk, first choose safer, already well-rated borrowers and then diversify, i.e., split your investment across multiple borrowers, ideally across different geographies, income sources, and so on." Patel adds, "Spread your money across various maturity buckets to reduce risk and increase overall return." Lending on these platforms is not the same as investing in a bank fixed deposit. Only lenders having higher risk tolerance should lend on these platforms. The potential higher return offered on these platforms is meant to compensate the lender for the higher risk taken.

Vishal Dhawan, board member, Association of Registered Investment Advisors (ARIA) says, "One way to mitigate risk is to avoid investing more than a defined percentage, say, 5-10 per cent, of your fixed-income allocation to these strategies."

Some platforms promise that you can take back your money anytime. Dhawan says, "The liquidity that is promised may not always be available as it is based on an assumption that not more than a certain percentage of lenders will seek their money back within a short period."

Look for transparency
Borrowers should stick to platforms that score high on transparency. Adhil Shetty, CEO, BankBazaar, says, "A good platform will transparently display information on all relevant aspects of borrowing on it. This includes the credit assessment process, processing fee, application process, terms of repayment, and grievance redressal, among others."

The availability of all these details will allow the borrower to take an informed decision. The absence of any or all of this information, on the other hand, should serve as a potential red flag. "If you do not know the repayment terms, you could inadvertently make prepayments and be penalised for it," says Shetty.
